

FedEx expands APAC hub for long-term growth

A Monitor Report

Date: 01 August, 2022

Guangzhou : FedEx Express will build a new express centre at Guangzhou Baiyun International Airport as part of its long-term expansion plans.

The company has signed an agreement with Guangdong Airport Authority Logistics Company to build a 41,000 sq m facility that will more than double the size of its current gateway at the airport.

The facility is due to become operational in 2027 and will connect outbound shipments from customers in southern China with FedEx's international network through the Asia Pacific Hub.

"It will be able to sort up to 25,000 packages and documents per hour, three times the sorting efficiency of the current facility," the company said.

"We continue to expand our network and service offerings to cater to the growing needs of our customers in the AMEA region and enhance their connections to global markets," said Kawal Preet, President of the Asia Pacific, Middle East and Africa, FedEx Express.

"China is integral to our regional and global network. Our investment in the South China Operations Center will support our long-term growth in a region with high economic potential," he added.

"Guangzhou sits within the Greater Bay Area of the Pearl River Delta which includes Shenzhen and Hong Kong."

"It is a region that is taking proactive steps to integrate against a blueprint that will further strengthen its position as a global economic powerhouse."

The FedEx Asia Pacific Hub at Guangzhou Baiyun connects Asian customers to FedEx's US and North American network through Anchorage and Memphis and the European network through Paris and Cologne.

Currently, the FedEx Asia Pacific Hub operates over 210 flights per week.