The Colombian carrier Avianca (AV) has announced the launch of four new international routes departing from Bogota's El Dorado International Airport (BOG) to three countries in the Americas: the United States, Brazil, and Honduras.

In the last few months, Avianca has been launching several new international routes. Last week, the airline began selling tickets for its three new services connecting Cartagena and Medellín with Ecuador. Additionally, Avianca launched seven new routes in December, including five to the United States, increasing its route offerings by 20% during the peak season.

Now, Avianca has announced four new international routes that will be inaugurated in March 2023. Two of these routes will connect Colombia with Brazil, one with the United States, and one with Honduras.

Avianca will operate flights from Bogota to Manaus International Airport (MAO) and Belo Horizonte International Airport (CNF). The Colombian carrier will launch a commercial service from Bogota to Boston Logan International Airport (BOS). Finally, the airline will begin serving Palmerola International Airport (XPL), the new airport for Tegucigalpa, which was inaugurated a year ago.
