Abu Dhabi: Etihad Airways, the national carrier of the UAE, announced plans on Thursday (Oct 17) to expand its operations within its European network.

Starting October 1, 2025, the airline will introduce daily flights to Düsseldorf, Germany, and Copenhagen, Denmark, thereby enhancing connectivity between the UAE and these European cities.

The Düsseldorf route will substantially increase from its current schedule to a daily service. "This expansion represents an addition of four weekly flights, providing passengers with greater flexibility and connectivity. Additionally, Düsseldorf will now be served year-round, offering consistent travel options throughout all seasons," the airline said in a statement.

Similarly, the Copenhagen route will be enhanced from its four-times-weekly schedule to daily operations. It said this change adds three more weekly flights to the Danish capital, further strengthening Etihad's presence in Scandinavia.

Arik De, Etihad Airways' Chief Revenue and Commercial Officer, said, "This move to daily flights for Dusseldorf and Copenhagen marks an exciting chapter in our European expansion."

"It reflects our commitment to providing unparalleled connectivity between Abu Dhabi and key European cities. These enhanced frequencies allow us to offer our guests greater flexibility and improved connection options across our global network," De added.

These enhancements reflect Etihad's commitment to expanding its global network and providing guests with more flexible and reliable travel options between Abu Dhabi and key European cities.
