As C-suite executives, policymakers, regulators, business partners, analysts, and innovators touch down in the Catalonian city tonight, the stage is set for the freshest data and analysis as the industry looks to move beyond its rebuilding and into a fully sustainable and digitised future for global and regional air connectivity, with passengers firmly at the core.

Keynote “State of the Industry” addresses launching the latest industry data and projections

Political and regulatory analysis

The sustainability challenge from operational, financial and societal perspectives

Awards and accolades honouring and showcasing industry excellence, including the ACI World-Amadeus Technology Innovation - Awards and the ACI Europe Best Airport Awards

Olivier Jankovec, Director General of ACI Europe, said: “The reinvention of our airports is no longer the stuff of future imaginings – it’s already underway. Even as we still strive to find economic equilibrium and regulatory parity and see systemic change throughout our operating models, this is the change we are embracing and driving forward. From our ground-breaking climate action work with Airport Carbon Accreditation to partnerships with vertiport operators. From economic analysis and expert input into policymaking, to projects hand-in-glove with digital innovators. We’re shaping the future of sustainable aviation on a daily basis. Our event in Barcelona will push this ambition to new heights.”

Luis Felipe de Oliveira, Director General of ACI World, said: “As aviation stakeholders meet in Barcelona for the most important global gathering of airport leaders, the industry continues to change as priorities shift and new technologies become available. Airports, however, remain core leaders of industrywide change: from decarbonisation, the transformation into energy hubs, and customer experience excellence, to revolutionising business intelligence solutions. This event presents a worldwide opportunity to collectively identify what airports, governments, and regulators should prioritise for a sustainable aviation ecosystem that consistently serves travellers and communities. With the doubling of passengers in the next 20 years, collaboration across aviation stakeholders is as crucial as ever in achieving our global industry targets. We are as strong as we are united.”

Aena Executive Vice President Javier Marín said, “Aviation is an industry that throughout its history has demonstrated great resilience - whether in overcoming adversity, embracing technological developments, or rising to meet an imperative such as environmental sustainability. The future of aviation is bright - and will continue to be a cornerstone of our connected, sustainable future.

“It’s a privilege and an honour for Aena to welcome the global airport industry, their stakeholders, policymakers and partners to this magnificent city of Barcelona. Aena’s recovery journey from the pandemic has been one of strength, and our commitment to delivering the highest standards of passenger experience, twinned with innovation and digitisation, will be the hallmarks of the future. We are delighted to host our peers as we jointly take these discussions forward.”
